ABOUT CLEMSON UNIVERSITY

Founded in 1889, Clemson University is a premier, highly selective public R1 land-grant institution in Clemson, South Carolina. Known for its strong school spirit, it features a scenic campus on Lake Hartwell and offers robust programs in engineering, business, and science. The university emphasizes undergraduate research, boasting top-ranked career services and a collaborative, “family” atmosphere.

Clemson University is a top-tier public research institution that serves as a cornerstone of South Carolina’s academic and economic landscape. For the Fall 2025 academic year, the university reached a total enrollment of 29,545 students, comprising 24,060 undergraduates and 5,485 graduate students. Admissions have become increasingly competitive, with a 42.4% acceptance rate for the Class of 2029. Despite this selectivity, Clemson remains deeply committed to its state, with 58.6% of undergraduates being South Carolina residents and 91% of all in-state applicants receiving a “path to Clemson” through various entry programs.

The university’s economic footprint is a massive driver for the state of South Carolina, generating an annual $6.4 billion economic impact and supporting 37,100 jobs statewide. Research is a primary engine of this growth; as an R1 research institution, Clemson’s annual research expenditures exceed $334 million. The university’s value to the state is significant, returning $35 in economic output for every single dollar invested by the state. Furthermore, a strong talent pipeline is maintained as 58% of alumni choose to remain and work in South Carolina after graduation.

In the realm of sports, Clemson is defined by Memorial Stadium, famously known as “Death Valley”. Holding over 81,500 fans, it is regarded as one of the loudest and most intimidating environments in college football. The game-day experience is anchored by what is often called “the most exciting 25 seconds in college football”—a tradition where players touch Howard’s Rock before sprinting down a steep hill onto the field. This tradition, which began in 1942, serves as a powerful symbol of the university’s “Tiger Rag” spirit and deep-rooted athletic excellence.

TENANT PROFILE

HipBurger started as a humble food truck, rolling through the streets of Greenville, Mauldin, Travelers Rest, and Greer, serving up sizzling burgers, crispy chicken sandwiches, poppable nuggets, and fries. But this wasn't just any food truck—it was a kitchen on wheels, where every meal was made to order, we ensured that each bite was as fresh as possible. From the moment you placed your order, our team sprang into action. Whether it was our signature HipBurger, nuggets, or fries, everything was prepared right on the spot. Patties were thrown onto the grill, nuggets were breaded and dropped into our onboard fryers, and fries were seasoned and salted to perfection, all before being handed out through the truck's window.

It wasn't long before HipBurger became a local favorite. From Fall for Greenville to Fireworks at Unity Park, the "HipTruck" became a must-visit at every major event in town. Neighborhoods loved having us at HOA gatherings, weddings wanted something alternative, and other special events sought us out. We weren't just serving food; we were bringing people together, creating a sense of community with every meal.

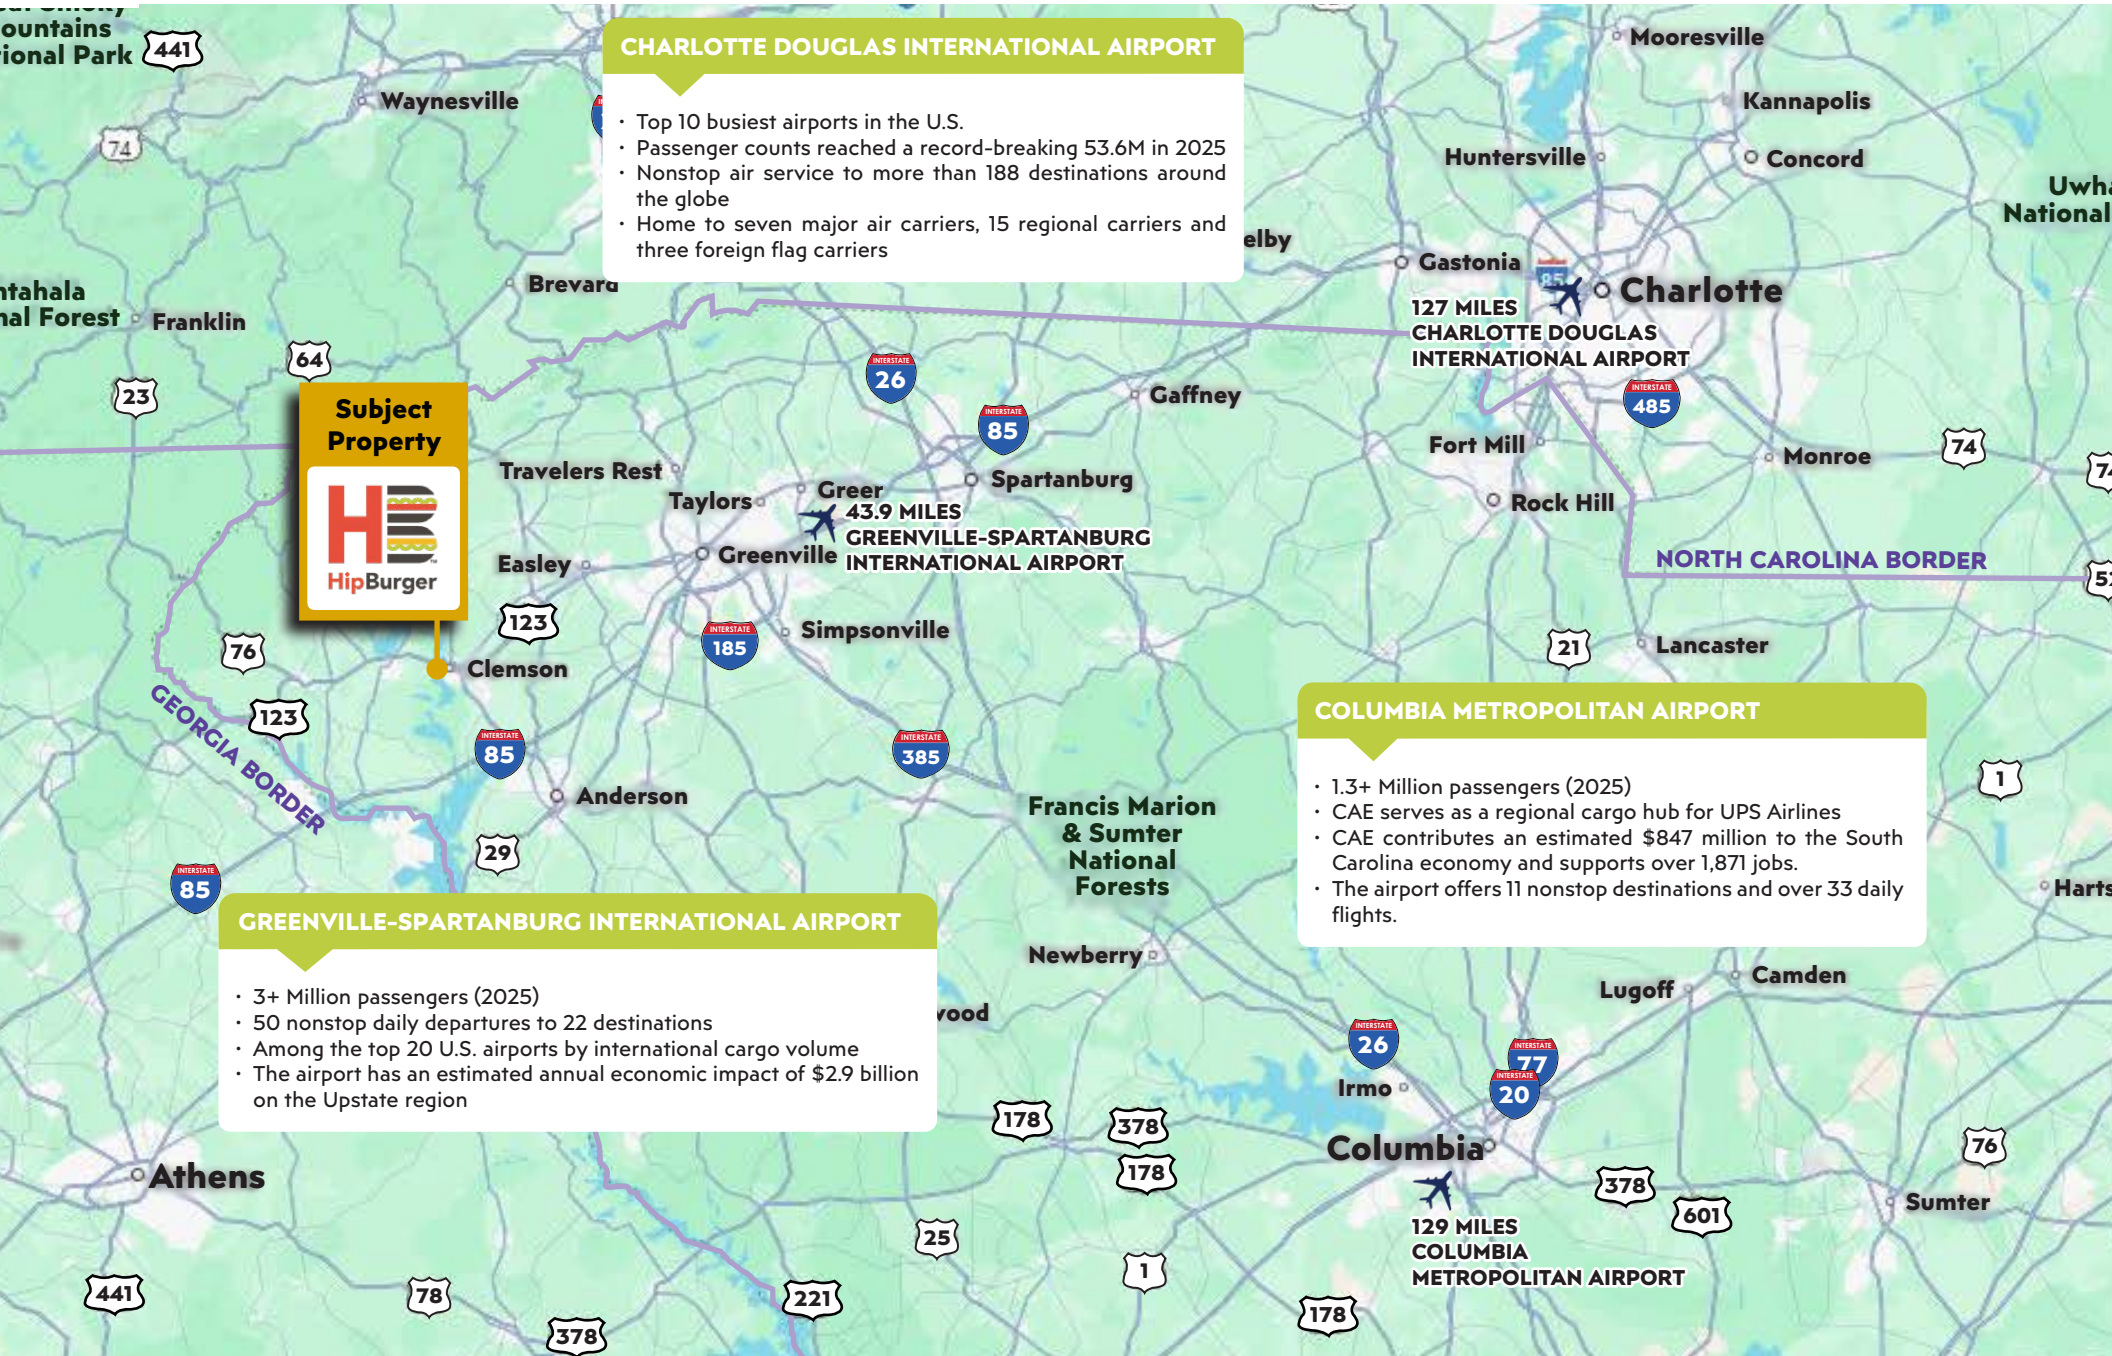

As our popularity soared, we took the next big step, evolving from our beloved food truck into our first-ever brick-and-mortar restaurant in Mauldin and further expanding into multiple locations across the Upstate of South Carolina. Despite the sleek, modern vibe of the new space, the essence of HipBurger stayed the same. Our restaurant kept the spirit of the "HipTruck" alive—a good old burger joint, deeply rooted in the heart of Greenville, serving up the same mouthwatering meals that continue to keep us a local favorite. After all, at HipBurger, life is better with a burger.
